History Is All Around Us: Historic Calgary Week

As the city gears up for Historic Calgary Week, July 24–August 3, here's an opportunity to test your knowledge of Calgary, past and present. The theme for this year's Historic Calgary Week is "History Is All Around Us."

Please send your completed puzzle, together with your name, address and phone number, to PUZZLE, 311-223 12th Ave. SW, Calgary, AB T2R-0G9, postmarked no later than August 14, 2009. Entries can be dropped off at the H.S.A. Office, 320-610 8th Ave. SW. The solution will be published in the Calgary Herald on Sunday, August 17, 2009. Entries are limited to one per household.

Prizes will include a one-year membership of the Glenbow Museum, a framed print of "Indian Church," by Emily Carr, courtesy of the Prints Charming Art Gallery, 211, 10 Ave., SW; gift certificates for The Kensington Riverside Inn, the Lazy Loaf and Kettle Restaurant, the Rice for King Vietnamese Restaurant, 9190 Macleod Tr. ### FROM PAGE B2 SURVIVORS: Promising

Odanadi offers medical treatment, counselling, education, vocational training and alternative therapies such as traditional Indian dance, theatre, singing, music, karate, yoga and art classes. The program is widely recognized as a success, even as it evolves by trial and error. Over 18 years, Odanadi has rescued more than 1,800 people, exposed 54 trafficking networks and brought more than 135 traffickers to justice. Still, the road to recovery and reintegration is a long one. Cab driver Selvie Kunjegovoda has flourished since she left Odanadi. The former child bride was prostituted by her much older husband, but remarried for love in April. She's been promoted by her employer, the Public Health Research Institute, and now drives pregnant women from the villages to their medical appointments. But for every success story, there is failure. Last year, one girl doused herself in gasoline and set herself ablaze after being rejected when she returned to her village. Odanadi believed she was ready to be reintegrated, but clearly she wasn't, nor was the village ready to accept her back. Shortly after the bike trip ended, Sindu and a few other girls got caught planning to leave in the middle of the night. Stanly and Parashuram tried to convince them to stay, but Sindu refused. They don't know where she is or what she is doing. I try to be grateful for what was achieved. "For 30 days, we cycled with survivors of the deepest hurts from Mumbai brothels and abusive homes," trip co-ordinator Christina Lagdameo writes in an update to volunteers. "They mixed with the communities that rejected them and reasserted their place in the world. As we made our way across rural India, each of you helped build bridges to self-esteem, confidence and fearlessness. I hope you saw that in them before you left, because we see it in their eyes and hearts now." The trip initiated an important chapter in their healing, but where they go from here is for them to decide. I remember the night the girls failed to return from washing their clothes, and see it as a symbol of a promising future for these young women. The teenagers had not gotten themselves into trouble, as feared. Jahnvi and the others were splashing about at the lake, any trace of suffering long washed away. In that moment, they seemed to have found peace. They seemed happy. Their laughter still resonates in my heart.
